

Dim Dawn

All visions arise, after being formed they fall. Only to arise greater, brighter stronger all over again. A cycle of Positive and Negative, allowing great fluctuations resulting in something accumulating to a great accolade.

Psychologically speaking jumping from positive to negative mindsets rapidly is unhealthy, a steady balance is key to the greatest innovations, our universe has taken that burden on all on its own, at least so it seems.

Now, surely that precise balance we all seek has many prior variations, a simple solar flare can break away all of what holds us in balance, the reason for dawn is a diminishing concept, fire is the reason for that. Establishing a notion, that eventually we will not have our earths cycles, in which fire is telling us that we can still survive without cycles, it'll just result in a diluted perception of existence, a warped reality. However human brains programmatically can replicate, deviate and assimilate this cycle in various ways.